Hello evryone!

Some time ago I reserved the MW810 Yahoo! Group site with the intention of moving all 810 related information from the MW800 group to its own group.

Well, I've been working for the last couple of hours on moving the 810 specific files and it's just about done. This group is for MW810 F5208 and the new 2.0 model only.

All information for the MW800 F5206, F5207 and F5217 model specific information can be found at http://tech.groups.yahoo.com/group/MW810

Feel free to swing on over and join that group as well. Starting over is a pain in the @%! I know, but if anyone has content to contribute please do...

2. MW810 - Win7 upgrade

For those interested and do not have a R1.1 or R1.2 MW810, I installed Win7 (fresh) on a 1.0 running on a CoreDuo 1.66 with 4GB RAM. Seems to work much better than XP and required min amount of driver install.

It will work with the existing XP drivers for the MW810 display, everything else seems to have native Win7 drivers (Intel Video, Wifi, sound, etc).

If using the Sierra Wireless 52xx series cards, you'll need the current drivers for that - as it sees part of the modem but its still looking for the card serial drivers.

Other than needing to grant just about everything admin permissions in Win7, seems to work well in on the 810. I have not tried a MW800 as of yet.

What Audio driver did you use? It seems that this is the only driver I can not install.

Thanks

I don't recall. It was either from the Win7 or MW810 CD. I don't recall having to do find anything on the internet. Worse case could have been the "search the internet option" within the driver setup option when you right click on the hardware componet within device manager.

Unlike the MW800, a HD heater is REQUIRED to boot the MW810. The heater flex is cheap, but Motorola will not sell to anyone. It is a depot repair item only at flat rate pricing which is currently ~$400 a unit

Is there a way to "fake" that and make the unit this that there is one?
A jumper somewhere?

Not that anyone is aware of. The most you can do is boot to the internal shell, or possibly a USB drive.

Updating the firmware, or something else?

If its not booting after a firmware update, then the computer may be hosed. Usually, no amount of resetting will cure that, and no master "reset" switch that I am aware of.

No drivers are needed. You only need to set the serial port output in the Trimble Studio software (Download the current version from trimble) and set it to NMEA. By default it is set to TISP.

I support the MW810 revs 1.0, 1.1 and 1.2. We're running 64bit Windows 7 on MDTs along with custom applications. I joined up here because we just received 1/2 a dozen rev 1.2s and I'm trying to find parts and info to get them up to par for our applications.
I hope to learn more about these units and help others out with any assistance I can offer given my limited knowledge.

The Lassen iQ Chips tend to get tempermental. We had to change out all of them on our rigs becuase we couldn't get them to work reliably. The trimble Condor C2626 is a drop in replacement that works fantastic on Com 2 . you do however have to look out for something called Crazy mouse syndrome. to address that issue, you'll need to work off of the touch screen and the right and left click buttons on the keyboard to disable the Microsoft Serial ballpoint device (it's under mice and pointing devices in the device mangler).

This iQ (and the older ones) would default back to the TISP settings usually during power pulls or similar power inturptions. I went for a year without having to mess with it, then after puling the cpu out and other stuff, it went back...

I agree that the C2626's are a nice option. At ~$20 ea, and its NMEA only, its an excellent investment.

Ensure that in the MW manager that the power is enabled to the GPS, its under "lines control".

Then set the trimble software to auto detect and let it run.

Worse case, you need to download the software for the SKII/SK8 (for the MW800) and perform a factory reset.

GPS is typically on COM2 unless the windows installation decided to relabled com ports.

heaters are unattanbile from Motorola. They are "depot" only items.

The daughter boards and sim card holders are available. I have some part numbers up on batlabs. Any MSS/dealer should be able to order them if you don't have an account.

The MW810's will NOT boot up without the heater flex - and the flat rate pricing for these is in the $400 range.

I recently received a bunch(8) of MW810's (rev 1.1 and 1.2s) from the city and they are all missing some parts. Primarily I'm looking for the daughterboards to mount the GPS block and the cellular cards in them. does anyone have any or know where I can get them? I believe I would also need a source on the sim card holders and the HD heaters as well. Thanks, Russ

Looks like I might have to reverse engineer the heater flexes. I was really hoping to not have to do that.
I have the part numbers from Batlabs and have a repair depot that can get them for me.

If you get one, please post. A few of us with depot contacts tell us the heater flex is not orderable at all (same with the hdd flex).

Sorry fro the miss-understanding, the system was running on Windows XP, so I reformatted the hard drive and installed Windows 7. After the installation of Windows 7 was completed I loaded the drivers for the sound card and and the touch screen, and the MW810 option menu. I made sure that all the internal options like the GPS board were tuned on, so I loaded Street and trips and it found the GPS on com port 2.
the only problem left is that the mouse pointer goes not for a few minuets and them settles down??

Thanks

sounds like you might have crazy mouse syndrome.
Get into the device manager and disable the "Microsoft serial ballpoint" driver.
I had about 25 working MDC's dropped in my lap with non functional GPS. I changed out the Trimble iQ chips with the Trimble Condor C2626, enabled GPS and the pointer went nuts. A FREE call to Motorola got me that I was fighting with Crazy mouse and how I had to fix it. I don't know if it was free because I'm a former Motoroloan or they just felt sorry for me.

Sadly the 810 requires a different monitor cable than my 800s and I do not have one. Does anyone know of a low cost cable that is readily available to test my mw810 monitor? Does anyone here maybe have an extra that they would be willing to part with? I'm not looking to spend very much because I don't even know if the 810 monitor works. Any help would be appreciated.

I have an MW810 (Version 1) that came to me with a wiped hard drive. I cannot get any version of Windows (XP, 7, or 8) to run on it. Ubuntu and other Linux distributions install and run without issue. Windows XP (what was originally on the computer, according to the COA), crashes during install with a 0x0000007b https://www.google.com/search?client=firefox-a&hs=N0Y&rls=org.mozilla:en-US:official&channel=sb&q=0x0000007b&sa=X&ei=M7DnU5CODMinyASK-oHoCg&ved=0CBwQ7xYoAA error on a BSOD during install. 7 & 8 give a black screen error during install. Booting a live USB version of Windows (any version) gives the same errors. Live USB Windows copies also crash when trying to boot with the hard drive removed completely. All the research that I've done points to a SATA driver issue with Windows. Most people solve similar problems by changing the BIOS settings to set the hard drive to IDE compatability mode. The BIOS on the MW810 has no such options. Is there a way to change the hard drive controller mode from the built-in EFI shell? Do I need to update the BIOS somehow? My BIOS version is 1.18.1075. Is there a special driver that I am missing? Has anyone else encountered and solved this problem? It is extremely frustrating.

Problem solved!I had been trying to install Windows from USB flash (made using official Microsoft ISOs and the official Microsoft USB install creation tool). I ended up tearing apart an old desktop computer and an old external hard drive and creating an external DVD-ROM drive. I burned the exact same ISO to DVD, booted from my franken-drive and the Windows 7 installer fired right up with no trouble. The problem seems to lie somewhere with the EFI / UEFI boot system on these units not playing nicely with Windows and USB flash. In any case, all is now well. I hope this info can help someone else in the future.

If there's any paperwork / schematic packed with that I'd like a scan before it goes to it's new home. Or maybe the schematic scan and parts list can go in the files section of the yahoogroup.

Installing a MW8xx / F5217 in my van is on my list, but far enough down that someone else should have your cable and books. I can make my own cable when it's time, and the available manual PDFs are sufficient for me.

I had a ssd in mine. You need to reuse the heater flex on it so use a hair dryer to lossen up the adhesive when swapping them over.

Without the heater it will not boot. I've talked to data support if there is a different hdd flex for the factory ssd drives but he couldn't find any other part numbers, even though it's not the same hdd flex.

They will not sell you a new flex and it would have to go to the depot for a very expensive repair for a $40 part so be careful.

I have 4GB of ram in mine and win7 works much better than xp in it.

FWIW I put win7 in a ml900 and mw800. Not the greatest CPU to run it but somewhat works.

I just looked at the drives closer today as I Just glimpsed at them befor . There are heaters in all of them. Didn't realise it was a combined flex cable. I thought it was just the drive cable only. My bad...

I just need to get my hands on the Auxiliary cable with terminal block (P.N: FKN8533).

The current going rate is $459.00. It doesn't matter what's wrong with the units, they'll repair it. I just had to send in 2 screens because the touchscreen wasn't working. Odd issue, the touch screen would barely pick up a finger on it and this would prevent the touchpad on the KB from working.
I have replaced hard drives with SSD drives with limited success. the older revs wont recognize the drives but the 1.2's will. Just transfer over the heater flexes and it shouldn't be a problem.
I'm sure you could make a killing if you could create an aftermarket heater flex.

If both connectors at each end are the same size, it looks like you might have a cable for a MW800.
It fits the MW810 cpu unit but not the display?
The cable might have a white tag with a part number that might be searchable for info.
Sounds like you are from Michigan.

Yes the cable works with lcd mw800 and cpu 810 but my lcd 810 do not fit the lcd port end is wider than the cable or lcd 800 port.

Also im looking for mw810 drivers. Motorola site it not working.

Yup--wrong cable is the problem.
A link to drivers is in the files section posted by wa8iqo.
Follow the link, search for "MW810", and download the MW810 FSK .iso file to burn your CD.
This is presuming you have a F5208 V1.0 or v1.2

Hi Gang

Just got a Cradlepoint IBR1100 rugged vehicle MiMO cell router. The router has an ignition sense wire to turn itself on when the car is running. In place of ignition activation, I want the router to turn on when I turn on the computer. The ignition sense is rated at 3V input high threshold (36V tolerant).

So, I need to know were I can tap into. I don't have a VIP connector so I'm thinking maybe a pin on the RS232 port or making a USB plug to access the power when on.

Thanks

I need 1.0, but getting the OS reloaded on mine has been impossible. Every bootable external sees the leftover vista boot manager that wasn’t removed and refuses to go on. More an “incorrectly removed OS problem than a 810 problem, I think.

Trying to figure out if the hard drive can be removed so that I can format the darn thing. Got intimidated by all of the extra cables that go to it.

I thought they may be in the files section. It was available on the Motorola symbol site a couple of years back - but with the Motorola Soultions change it may not be available.

Check those two places first (and look for links on batboard.batlabs.com in the MW810 thread in the computer section) and see if those still work

107. Drivers for the display's buttons?

Yahoo group: MW810
Date: 2017-11-20 22:39:00 UTC
From: leesclave@...
Topic: 107 Message: 107

Hello all.

I just joined the group in an attempt to locate drivers for the display's buttons (USB vid:pid 0cad:9008), hoping to repurpose a few of the 12.1" 1200nit displays. Touchscreen and the lcd are gtg, but would like to make use of the buttons on the display as well.

Upon joining, I see the files section is empty now.

I did notice the recent message about checking batboard and motorola for drivers -- motorola requires an account to get to where any downloads may be located, and nothing found on batboard besides someone saying that per the administrator's guide "you can find the install package in the Dustup folder of the original MW810 operating system image."

Any chance that anyone has the driver files and/or config tools they'd be willing to share?

Thanks.

p.s. It would be nice to find a pinout for the 50-pin connector on the monitor too (I see one of the manuals has a pinout for the 60-pin on the back of the main unit, but not for the monitor). I can work around that, if need be, as I did buy one of the Motorola adapter/breakout cables (expensive and WAY too long for my intended use) and can just manually trace continuity.

Do you have the buttons working on a non-MW810 system? If so, what version of windows? Where did you get drivers? Without a driver, there is nothing generated to get assigned a function, and windows 10 searches but can't find a driver for it when plugged in.

Can you tell me more specifics on the "extra keys" program? The only "extra keys" program I'm finding is a virtual onscreen keyboard type app.

Thanks.

There is a Windows program for the display called “extra key” that allows you to assign functions / shortcuts to those keys

Hello all.

I just joined the group in an attempt to locate drivers for the display's buttons (USB vid:pid 0cad:9008), hoping to repurpose a few of the 12.1" 1200nit displays. Touchscreen and the lcd are gtg, but would like to make use of the buttons on the display as well.

Upon joining, I see the files section is empty now.

I did notice the recent message about checking batboard and motorola for drivers -- motorola requires an account to get to where any downloads may be located, and nothing found on batboard besides someone saying that per the administrator's guide "you can find the install package in the Dustup folder of the original MW810 operating system image."

Any chance that anyone has the driver files and/or config tools they'd be willing to share?

Thanks.

p.s. It would be nice to find a pinout for the 50-pin connector on the monitor too (I see one of the manuals has a pinout for the 60-pin on the back of the main unit, but not for the monitor). I can work around that, if need be, as I did buy one of the Motorola adapter/breakout cables (expensive and WAY too long for my intended use) and can just manually trace continuity.

Can you look into device manager and see what it is using for a driver for the Motorola CGISS usb device, please?

Thanks.

Please excuse me for my insolence as a noob on this group, but curiosity has gotten the best of me.

Why is there such a reluctance to share simple driver files for a couple of display buttons?

Have the men in black from motorola visited your houses in the wee hours of the morning, threatening your families' existences if you should so much as disclose how a few buttons could be made functional?

I don't mean to sound like an @$$, honestly. I just find it hard to comprehend, especially since prior to the symbol->motorolasolutions they were apparently freely available online.

Happy Thanksgiving (no. I'm not saying that to be a smart@$$).

A little progress on getting the display buttons to function... The 12.1" display uses a TI TUSB3410 USB->serial bridge.

In windows, loading the TUSB3410 drivers from Texas Instruments (after modifying the .inf file for the VID:PID of 0CAD:9008) you can successfully get a COM port. When set to 19200 baud, the port has very specific outputs for each button.

Button Press Release
Power C1 C0
1 F01 F00
2 F02 F00
3 F04 F00
4 F08 F00
5 F10 F00
6 F20 F00
7 F40 F00
8 F80 F00
Emerg E1 E0

In linux, you can load the ti_usb_3410_5250 module, specifying 0cad:9008, and get a functional com port under /dev/ttyUSBX, and if setting the baud rate to 19200, you can read the same outputs.

Trying to figure out the inputs that would light/change the LEDs, but so far no luck.

Sure would be easier with the Motoroala-specific drivers and/or ExtraKey.

Hello. I'm setting up a F5208 MW810 computer to use in an off-road truck for a moving map display. Has anyone found a way around having the heater? I've got a couple drive cartridges but when they pulled the hard drive they chucked the heater with them. I dug through my parts units and finally found a drive with a heater flex. I carefully pealed the heater off and stuck it to the new Seagate 1TB drive. It was scary going because I felt it tear a tiny bit but it was in a spot with no traces on it. I booted the system up and it saw the drive fine. I hooked up my external USB DVD drive and loaded windows 7. It works great except the touch screen and buttons aren't working. I just looked all over for the field support kit CD iso that I remember seeing years ago. Now motorola only lets their folks get it and requires a login. Now that symbol is zebra they don't have any files for it. Does anyone else have a copy of the iso? Is there a restore image for the system? I've heard a couple talk about it but haven't seen it. Is there a way to set the BIOS for an SSD so it ignores the heater? Thanks

There is probably a sense lead that is a pullup (so some + voltage) or a pull down (to ground). It should not be hard to trick that sense lead into reporting what it is needed...

Your touch screen and buttons are just missing a driver. There is a yahoogroup for the MW800 series, and their file section may have what you need.

Go here: <https://groups.yahoo.com/neo/groups/MW800/info>

It's not a busy group, there were all of 9 messages in all of 2017, 3 in 2016, and less than 100 in 2015. Anybody who is interested in a MW88xx should subscribe, and then download the entire files section just in case yahoogroups goes away.

Thanks for the clarification.
In the past the depot manuals have shown up on ebay now and then.
I have some of the MSF5000 and Quantar manuals - 5 and 6 inches thick. I did not ask where the seller got them, perhaps dumpster diving behind a Moto shop?
I'd suggest setting up a watch list on ebay - they call it a
Saved Search and will email you if something shows up.
Use something like
"Motorola (book, manual, instruction, repair, depot) (MW800, MW810, F5208, F5208A, F5218, F5218A)"
The parentheses is how ebay does an "OR".

Nope, not for MW. Last detailed manual was for the 520. The ML910, MW800/810 we’re depot only repairable items.

Radios on the other hand, could be field repairable and the detailed service manuals were Always available on MOL.

Just not the computer products.

You can’t even order the flex’s on MOL as It’s a “depot only” item
